GROUND RULES

The first rule for an effective partnership is quality communication. Partners must have relevant information about anything valuable to the partnership. Full disclosure ensures that any decision takes into account all meaningful information. A second rule might be appropriate prioritization to ensure the best use of resources... especially time and money.

Take care of the important things, and lesser issues will fall into place.

When something needs to be said, a true friend will say it, confident that better outcomes last longer than hurt feelings.

Ground Rules

For a team to work successfully, there must be an identified structure and process that all team members understand and respect. Ground rules keep everyone focused on success.

Producing publications was difficult for the team because we did not establish the ground rules before we started.
