SHARING

Richness of thought, range of solutions, and depth of perceptions develop as we interact with others and share experiences. When we incorporate what we learn from others into our knowledge base, we become a wiser and more valuable resource to those who seek our counsel. To enhance the breadth and depth of our knowledge, we must seek out those whose minds we respect, keep an open mind, and process what we hear objectively and without bias. Then we become wiser by melding what we learn into what we already know.

By sharing, we can influence or receive guidance to relieve current stresses and enhance the ability to deal with future challenges.

Sharing our Woes

Reviewing the same alternatives over and over rarely solves a problem. We need a new perspective. Sharing our frustration with a trusted friend might be just what we need to work through the problem and come up with a novel solution.

John startled her out of her tantrum. “What gives? You look like you’re in outer space.”
“Oh, nothing,” she stammered. “Just thinkin’.”
“You’re upset enough to be talking to yourself. How about talking to me instead?”
