AGREE to DISAGREE

Sometimes there is no middle ground... no compromise that satisfies everyone. In that case, the best outcome is to shake hands and remain friends. The key is respect -- respect for one another's right to an opinion, and respect for the diversity among us.

A variety of viewpoints enhances most situations. Learn to accept and respect uniqueness among colleagues.

Participation is the most meaningful aspect of membership in any organization.

Author Insight

Agreeing to Disagree

Sometimes, when people disagree, there's no middle ground that will satisfy both parties. That's the time to agree to disagree... to accept that neither is going to get their way. If the relationship is important, both parties must respect the other's position. Agreeing to disagree means no more discussion... no more attempts to persuade or dissuade.

Silent Struggle

Katie's jaw tightened and she swallowed an angry retort.

"What?" John asked, sensing the tension. "What's wrong?"

"Nothing," Katie replied evenly. "Let's not put a damper on our day by arguing about something that's already settled."
