Suffering is Personal

The hallmark of friendship is sensitivity to the uniqueness of each individual. A true friend can respond readily to the person who needs space to deal with adversity and the one who needs to process aloud in order to identify an appropriate response.

We grow through dealing with adversity... and through helping our friends solve their problems as well.

A friend who can provide for us the space that we need to process and grow is a true friend, indeed.

Author Insight

Suffering is Personal

Each person deals with adversity in a unique fashion. Some suffer in silence; others need to share their grief. Sensitivity to the uniqueness of others is one hallmark of a wise person and a good friend.

Against the World

You're doing better than you give yourself credit for. We each experience pain in our own way, and whatever way that is, it's our way, which makes it the right way.
